FACULTY OF SCIENCE

EDINBURGH.

PART THE FIRST

EDINBURGH.

M.DCCCXII

THE plan of forming a public Library appears to have been first adopted by the FACULTY of ADVOCATES, about the year 1680.

SIR GEORGE MACKENZIE of Rosehaugh, then Lord Advocate for Scotland, had the merit of projecting this useful institution; and, in 1682, having been elected DEAN of FACULTY, he accomplished his scheme, and had the honour of founding the ADVOCATES LIBRARY.

A small collection of books was at first purchased, and placed in a room provided for that purpose; and, at the first opening of the Library, Sir GEORGE pronounced an inaugural oration in Latin, in which he displayed the advantages of the institution, and suggested various measures for its improvement.

THE funds which the FACULTY at that time possessed, would not have permitted any rapid increase of the Library; but this was amply supplied by liberal donations.

SIR GEORGE MACKENZIE made several donations to the collection; and, in imitation of his example, not only many members of the FACULTY, but other gentlemen, showed their eagerness to encourage so laudable an establishment, at its first commencement, by considerable benefactions.

SINCE that time, many valuable donations have been made to the FACULTY. They are all faithfully recorded in a register kept for that purpose, in the Library, and the names of many Honourable, Noble, and Royal Donors, will be found there.

FOR some time after its first institution, no fixed fund was appropriated to the Library; but this defect was at length remedied. As each Advocate, at his his admission, paid a certain sum, the FACULTY appropriated a part of it to the Library; and, as this sum has been since gradually augmented, so has the proportion of it allotted to the Library.

SINCE the establishment of a regular fund, the collection of books has been greatly increased. For some years past the revenue has been much augmented; and by the prudent and faithful administration of the Curators, the FACULTY are now in possession of more than twenty-five thousand volumes.

IN mentioning the benefactors of this Library, it would be ungrateful to forget the learned and industrious Mr. THOMAS RUDDIMAN, who was admitted one of the Librarians in the beginning of this century, and continued in that office, till he resigned it in 1752. To his zeal for the prosperity of the institution, and to his unwearied care and attention, during fifty years which he spent in their service, the FACULTY owe the present flourishing state of their Library, and the most valuable part of their great collection.

WHEN this Library was first formed, the FACULTY adapted their views to the limited state of their funds. They confined their first purchases almost entirely to books of Law; but as their funds gradually increased, they came to extend their plan, and enriched their Library with books in every branch of polite literature. While no branch has been neglected, it has been more peculiarly the object of the FACULTY to render as complete as possible their collection of books on the Law, History, and Antiquities of GREAT BRITAIN. Upon the History, Law, and Antiquities, of most other European nations, their collection is considerable. In the 1707, the FACULTY received a large donation of books in Natural History, to which they have added many of the most costly and magnificent books on that branch of science. Their collection of authors on the Civil and Canon Law is very full; that of the most valuable editions of the GREEK and ROMAN classics is nearly complete; and that of the modern classics is completing with care and attention.

BESIDES printed books, the Library contains a large collection of manuscripts of great value. In 1698, the FACULTY purchased, at a considerable expence, all those scarce and curious manuscripts, which had been collected by Sir James Balfour of Denmylne, Lyon King at Arms. Since that time, they have acquired many valuable additions to their collection. Among others, there are here not only most of the antient Scottish chartularies, but likewise many volumes of original papers, relating to the affairs of Scotland, and copies of others, which have been preserved by Sir Robert Cotton, or are extant in the public offices in England.

IN the year 1705, the Faculty purchased a collection of Greek, Roman, Saxon, Scots and English medals; and several considerable additions have since been made, both by purchase and donation.

THE FACULTY is likewise possessed of a good collection of prints, which has been lately enriched by donations from some of the most celebrated engravers.

THIS first part of the Catalogue of the ADVOCATES LIBRARY was compiled by Mr. THOMAS RUDDIMAN and Mr. WALTER GOODALL, Keepers of the library. It was begun in 1735, and all, except the last page, printed in 1742.

THE additions since 1742, are so very considerable, that the catalogue of them will make another volume, equal in size to this. It is preparing for the press, and will be published in a very short time.
